

USING THE FIVE

Where each one goes

- Warm greige is the room. Walls, the largest soft surfaces. It is the colour fog would be if fog were warm. It should be doing almost nothing, which is the whole job.
- Oat is the cloth. Linen, wool, the curtain, the throw. It is the warmth you feel before you can name it. Layer two weights of it before you reach for a second colour.
- Walnut is the structure. One or two pieces of genuinely dark wood keep a pale room from floating away. In a winter room, wood is gravity.
- Stone is the object. A hand-thrown vase, a salt cellar, the matte grey of unglazed clay — the texture you want where the eye lands.
- Ember is the held breath. The terracotta appears once and never twice in the same view. One ember in a quiet room is a fire. Two is a theme.
