

A SECOND LOOK

The gathering table

The autumn table is the heart of the season's home, and it is laid the Japandi way: warm, considered, and unfussy. Hand-thrown stoneware in earth tones, not matching china. A walnut board down the middle for bread and cheese, served from the centre. A low run of candles and a few dried stems instead of a tall arrangement, so people can see one another across the table — the one rule that matters most.

The point of the gathering is the people, so the table should disappear behind them. Nothing tall, nothing precious, nothing that says "set piece." Just warm light, good plates with the marks of the maker on them, and enough bare wood showing through that the whole thing feels generous rather than staged.

AmorArc stoneware dinnerware

An 18-piece set in earth tones — reactive glaze, no two plates alike.

$$ SHOP →

Walnut cutting & serving board

Down the centre of the table — bread, cheese, the shared middle.

$$ SHOP →