

THIS SEASON

To read, to hear, to make

To read. Wabi-Sabi for Artists, Designers, Poets & Philosophers by Leonard Koren — the small, definitive book on the aesthetic of impermanence and imperfection that underlies everything in this issue. An afternoon's read; a lifetime's reference.

To learn. The phrase mono no aware — and then to start seeing it: in the turning leaf, the worn step, the chipped bowl. Once you have the word, the beauty of passing things is everywhere.

To make. A dried arrangement, from page 24 — the season caught and kept through the winter to come.

To notice. The golden hour arriving earlier each evening, and then the first frost. Mark them, as the almanac would. You have now kept your own calendar through a full turn of the year — and that, more than any purchase, is what a calm home is made of.

"Once you have the word for it, the beauty of passing things is everywhere."
